20.~ 21.

(Nathan and Justin are roommates. They are talking in the living room.)

Nathan : Guess who is cooking dinner for us tonight.

Justin : Oh, please don't tell me it's Debbie.

Nathan : Bingo! She dropped by my desk this morning and was going on about a new dish she wanted to try out on us.

Justin : Us? How did I get included in your little tasting party?

Nathan : That's easy. She was so excited about cooking for someone that I didn't have the heart to tell her that I wasn't interested. Also, I didn't want to get through this all alone, so I add you to the tasting party.

Justin : Man, that's really kind and thoughtful of you...

Nathan : Besides, she remembered all the kind words you had about her cooking every time she brought food into the office. She was happy to have you join us.

Justin : Oh, no! I didn't mean it!

Nathan : I know you didn't. This time you should tell her the truth even though it may hurt her feelings.

Justin : Why me? She invited you personally and you know her longer than I do, so you should be the one to give her the bad news.

Nathan : No way! That's why I can't tell Debbie her cooking is horrible.

Known as the third largest country in Asia, India is a land of colors, sights, smells, and spices. It lies over 4,300 kilometers west of Taiwan and has a population of around 1.3 billion people. Known for its beautiful beaches, high mountains, and delicious tea, India is a place that many people want to travel to. And although there are many amazing buildings, wonderful animals, and tasty foods to try, there is one very colorful reason why a lot of people go there, Holi.

Holi is a two-day Hindu festival that is celebrated around the full moon in March. On the night before Holi, people get together and light a large fire. They do this as a way to burn away any angry ghosts that may be around and to show that good always wins. It is a time for people to forget any old problems and start fresh. The next day, people go out on the streets and throw colorful powder at each other. They do it for fun, but also because each color has a special meaning. For example, red is for love, and green is for new beginnings. Some people like to celebrate by throwing water on one another. It's also common for people to give out candies, sweet cakes, or cookies all through the day. Later in the day, everyone will share a special meal with their families.

Holi has become very popular and is now being celebrated in many countries around the world. Taipei is no exception, and it celebrates Holi every year. Some special events, like the Color Run, have used the same colorful powders as the ones used during Holi. This has made some people a bit angry, as Holi is a very special festival for the people of India. Most people would agree that this is a good thing, though, as it can teach more and more people about India and its traditions. Visit India today or enjoy a Holi
